

Wanted:

LIS students looking to publish!

Library Student Journal is an international, peer reviewed, and open access publication for students in the Library and Information Science (LIS) field. It offers a forum for LIS students to publish their research (articles, essays and opinion pieces accepted) as well as become involved in the scholarly publishing process (through becoming peer reviewers, copyeditors, and proofreaders).

More importantly – we want you (yes you!) – LIS students, to send us your essays, opinion pieces, and articles on all things library & information science.

Keep in touch with LSJ by:
reading the blog: <http://www.librarystudentjournal.org/blog/>
joining the Facebook group: Library Student Journal
joining the Second Life group: Library Student Journal or IMing: Jambina Oh for more information.

And you can always check out:

www.librarystudentjournal.org